1. Is it possible to get to the Swallow's Nest on foot?
2. What makes the Swallow's Nest attractive to the divers?
3. How did the location influence the design of the castle?
4. What art exhibitions are held in the castle?
5. What happened to the castle after the earthquake?
6. Why did the castle get its name?
7. What films were shot near the Swallow's Nest?

A. Swallows are elegant and very cute bird. Probably because of this, they are popular and always positive characters in different stories and fairy tales. These birds like nesting under the roofs of houses. It is considered good luck to have a swallow's nest in your house. There it, however, one swallow's nest which people can visit. It is situated in Crimea, not far from Yalta. It is an old castle which is attached to the Aurora rock just like a swallow's nest.

B. The first construction on the top of Aurora cliff was built in 1877. It was a small house. In 1910 it was replaced by a romantic castle, the Swallow's Nest. Inside, the Swallow's Nest is not large. It contains only a few rooms on two floors. The size of the building site demanded extraordinary decisions from architects. That is why some of its balconies stretch beyond the ground and hang directly over the water.

C. It looks like the nice castle could easily slide right into the Black Sea, but it is very solid and reliable. In fact, it survived a severe earthquake in 1927 without being seriously damaged. The cliff itself was not so lucky — it cracked under the stress of the quake. So the Swallow's Nest was closed for 40 years due to the vertical crack in the rock beneath it. In 1970, after great engineering works, the castle was opened as restaurant. Following another major renovation in 2011, the Swallow's Nest became a public museum.

D. The Swallow's Nest has become the symbol of Crimea's southern coastline. It was featured in several movies. It was used as the setting for the Russian screen version of Agatha Christie's And Then There Were None (or Ten Little Niggers) in 1987. The castle was also featured in the Russian-Polish children's film Mister Blot's Academy. Once, the Swallow's Nest also welcomed Jackie Chan, who shot some scenes there.

E. The Tsar's Path (or the Sunny Path) was created in 1861 for the Russian Tsar Alexander III upon his doctor's recommendation. Nowadays it runs for 6.7 kilometres, 150 metres above the sea. The legendary walking path starts out at Livadia Palace and finishes at the Swallow's Nest. It is decorated with sculptures, rare exotic trees and bushes, and unique benches to rest on. Tourists enjoy walking along the path a lot.

F. Those who come to the Swallow's Nest by boat may notice a small cave with the same name. The waters inside are very deep and clear. For this reason, the cave is a great attraction to those who like to swim, boat and dive. On the ceiling of the cave one can see a large dark spot. The locals say that this mark was left by the fire of ancient people. However, there is not any proof for this claim yet.

Federal Express

What does it take to start a business? A brilliant idea? A great cam? Money? Yes. All of those things. But the most important thing is a belief in the significance of the future business. It is really amazing that most large companies, Federal Express for example, have stories of their humble beginnings.

Fred Smith was born in Mississippi, in the United States, in 1944. Fred was named after his father, a successful businessman. In 1948, when Fred was only four years old, his father died. Fortunately, Smith senior had made enough money to provide for his family. However, it would be a long time before the children would see any of their father's money. Concerned that his children could waste their money, Smith senior had his money placed into a trust fund to be given to the children upon their 21st birthdays.

In 1962, Fred Smith entered Yale University, one of the oldest and most famous universities in the USA. In 1965, as part of his coursework, he wrote an economics paper exploring the process of transportation of goods in the United States. He found that the delivery service used lorries or passenger airplanes to transport large packages across the United States, which was not very convenient. Smith proposed to deliver small parcels by special planes. Smith tried to prove that it could be a good business but did not go into details about how to actually run such a company. Although Smith received a grade of C for his work, he did not give up on the idea. After graduating from the university, in 1971, he launched the company Federal Express.

Within the first three years of founding the company, Federal Express was very close to bankruptcy. It was losing over $1 million a month because of rising fuel costs. Eventually the company had just $5000 to its name. Smith tried to raise more money but he failed.

Most ordinary people would have stopped at this point and shut down the company. Not Fred Smith. The founder of the young company performed an extraordinary and courageous deed. Smith flew to Las Vegas and played Blackjack that weekend with the remaining company funds. Yes, the whole $5000. He was unbelievably lucky that day! On Monday, management of the company had a pleasant surprise. Federal Express had $32,000 on its bank account, which was just enough to cover the fuel for their planes and to continue operating.

Soon after, the company was able to strengthen its position and continue to develop. At the root of the company's success was Smith's philosophy: people, service, profit (P-S-P). From the company's earliest beginnings, even when times were tough, Smith tried to provide his workers with a good salary, special bonuses and medical coverage.

In 2000, the company changed its name to the FedEx Corporation. Today FedEx is a global giant with operations in more than 220 countries and territories using over six hundred aircraft and 46,000 vehicles. It provides fast and reliable deliveries to clients worldwide.

10. In his will, Fred's father left all money to charity.
11. In his coursework Fred Smith described his idea of a new delivery service.
- 12) Fred Smith's family were against his idea of setting up Federal Express.
- 13) At the beginning Federal Express had financial difficulties.
- 14) Once Fred Smith lost all his company's money playing Blackjack in Las Vegas.
- 15) Fred Smith paid a lot of attention to his workers' welfare.
16. Nowadays Fred Smith's company is the most reliable delivery service in the world.
